

It is crucial to have transparent, accountable, and inclusive governance mechanisms to create an enabling environment for producers to transform the systems they operate, following agroecological concepts and practices that guarantee social participation and intersectoral coordination. Equitable access to natural resources is critical to greater social justice