

Agroecology builds and disseminates its technologies based on local knowledge and global scientific knowledge in searching for solutions adapted to each context. Knowledge sharing plays a central role in developing and implementing agroecological innovations to address challenges in food systems. The experience of the producers on agricultural biodiversity and management and their knowledge of markets and institutions are absolutely central in this process.